CUSTOMER SERVICES

When you think of the business of international translation, Indiana may not be the first location that comes to mind. Certainly MetLife found it hard to believe until Kate Sewalk put the company in touch with IUP's Translation Center.

A graduate of the University of Pittsburgh and Clark University, Kathleen Sewalk attended IUP in the early 1980s in pursuit of her second master's degree. While studying, she also worked for MetLife in Johnstown, Pa. Eventually she became national director of the company's quality assurance program, overseeing the details out of the Client Relations Center in Johnstown. The quality assurance customer contact program is designed to ensure that customers understand the basic aspects of their newly purchased life insurance.

MetLife soon recognized that the ever-expanding cultural diversity of its customer base was creating a growing need to communicate with customers in preferred languages other than English. In 1997, Sewalk was challenged to provide a solution for the quality assurance program.

Meanwhile, Victor Drescher was spreading the word about IUP's Translation Center. Founded in 1991 by Drescher and Malcolm Hayward, the center provides translations for companies and individuals, such as hospital equipment assembly instructions, sales materials, Web pages, and personal letters.

While Sewalk was researching solutions for MetLife, she discovered a brochure created by Drescher advertising the department's services. After discussing the idea with him, Sewalk contacted MetLife's New York office. When Sewalk proposed using IUP's Translation Center, MetLife management had their doubts that such a service could be found in Western Pennsylvania, of all places. Sewalk recalled, "People found it hard to believe that an adequate pool of foreign nationals would be available here. So it has taken a while to establish the credibility of what we do here." But success speaks volumes. IUP's Translation Center has become the foreign language unit for MetLife's quality assurance operation.

The biggest roadblock to the Translation Center project had been finding enough space for the offices, telephones, and other equipment. With MetLife's new interest in IUP, Drescher realized the Translation Center needed a home. His eyes quickly turned to Eicher Hall, originally an unused garage that had been taken over by the archaeology program for storing and cleaning finds.

Although the Translation Center was in competition with other university departments for using the space in Eicher, having a business partner spurred the decision. "When we brought in a revenue-generating business opportunity, all of a sudden everything just fell into place," said Drescher. With the help of Sewalk and Dean of Humanities and Social Sciences Brenda Carter, the interior of Eicher Hall was redesigned. Carter assisted with architectural ideas, including turning the bathroom into a conference room and designing windows to replace two garage doors in a former loading dock area.

The Translation Center is now thriving. Most of its employees come from the Graduate School, but a graduate student's wife and a faculty member's wife are also on the staff. The call center provides verbal translations in seven languages: Cantonese, Korean, Mandarin, Polish, Russian, Spanish, and Vietnamese. The center also provides written surveys in seven other languages: Thai, Arabic, Tagalog, Japanese, Farsi, Hebrew, and Urdu. As MetLife identifies more customer needs, more languages are added—the most recent being Hindi. Drescher has no problem finding people who speak the languages. "Whenever we need some language beyond what we have, we just go out and find it," he said. "IUP has an incredibly diverse international population."

The employees receive about three to four weeks' training by MetLife before they are ready to work with customers. Regular training updates are received on-site or by visits to Johnstown, and a full-time supervisor is always at the center. Employees learn insurance details so they can understand most customer comments and questions. The callers carefully learn MetLife's authorized scripts that detail what they can and cannot say, including how to answer any of a multitude of questions they may get from customers. Even if the callers must paraphrase to make the subject easier for the customer to understand, the paraphrasings must be approved by MetLife.

Drescher and Sewalk believe this is a winning situation all around. MetLife was able to solve its problem at a very reasonable cost with top-notch, efficient translators. The callers get hands-on training and a good paying job, not always easy for a foreign student. IUP wins by getting a percentage of the money that MetLife budgets for the program.

The College of Humanities and Social Sciences is the first beneficiary of this money, using it to support a faculty exchange with a university in Costa Rica. To counter the cost-of-living difference, the money is also used to supple-

MORE CORPORATE CONNECTIONS

The MetLife-Translation Center connection is one of hundreds of corporate-academic partnerships at IUP. A comprehensive list would fill the magazine, but here are samples of their incredible diversity:

> The Computer Science Department's partnership with PPG Industries includes financial support, internships, employment recruitment, on-site training programs, and a faculty exchange program that involved a PPG glass plant in China.

> IKEA, The Gap, Hershey Direct, Fashion Group International, and Pittsburgh's Children's Hospital are part of a long list of corporate internship partnerships maintained by the Human Development and Environmental Studies Department.

> Eberly College of Business and Information Technology has a partnership with SAP America, worldwide leader in sales and installation of Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) software. SAP provides free software and faculty training in exchange for the college's agreement to integrate ERP applications in different parts of its curriculum. The benefit to the college has been valued at over a million dollars.

> The Academy of Culinary Arts in Punxsutawney welcomes a long list of prestigious corporate partners to its sponsor fair. The partners, which also hire culinary students for externships and permanent employment, range from The Boulders in Arizona to North Carolina's Grove Park Inn.

> Safety Sciences Department internships and co-op partnerships include companies from Maryland to California. The department also has grant/scholarship partnerships with Alcoa, Pittsburgh; J. & H. Marsh & McLennan, New York, N.Y.; and United Parcel Service, Itasca, Ill.

> The Department of Food and Nutrition maintains dietetic internship contracts with scores of corporate organizations engaged in the health care and restaurant industries. Among them are Laurel Crest Manor, Ebensburg; Conemaugh Health System, Johnstown; and Rustic Lodge, Indiana.

And a few examples of other kinds of partnerships:

> Geoscience Department students perform experiments to determine what sorts of solid-state containers provide the best immediate repositories for radioactive and other hazardous wastes as part of a partnership with Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

> The College of Education and Educational Technology has a large number of school district partnerships, including the Pittsburgh Collaborative, an outstanding example of cooperation.

ment the exchange teacher's salary. The customers also win by getting the best service in the most understandable way possible. "It's a nice feeling to have two institutions of such longevity being able to work together for a greater common good," asserts Sewalk. "The best part is that it gives the students an affiliation and a solidarity. The community that's created here is pretty special. This is a hub. They're all bilingual. And also, the relationships last throughout their tenure here. We just saw our first class graduate. It's very rewarding."

"They've developed a sense of family here," said Drescher. "Some of them come here because they like to be here, they like to be around the people. At the same time they're providing a valuable service to an international company that's been an excellent customer."

Sewalk also helps M.B.A. students gain cutting-edge experience with internships at MetLife. Sewalk looks at what the students' areas of interest are and how she can apply their knowledge to what the company needs. The programs she designs for the interns help MetLife understand its constituency and the demographics of ethnic markets. With the surveys the students create, MetLife is able to learn more about the product-purchasing characteristics of various ethnic communities.

Since starting the program in 1997, MetLife has supported five paid internships for M.B.A. students. "These experiences not only provide income for the students, but also give them very realistic experience working for a Fortune 500 company," said Drescher. "Also, this line in their resume' gives them an added boost into their first job after graduation."

In the future, the Translation Center will respond to the changing needs of MetLife customers. "Right now, we're trying to understand about the languages of the Indian subcontinent, because that seems to be an emerging need. So we pool our resources to satisfy that need," admits Sewalk. "Any company seeking to do business in the various ethnic markets needs to be able to service and communicate with their customers. Ethically, morally, practically, from every perspective you look at it, it's the right thing to do. It feels good, too." 🐼

THE ESSENTIAL INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVE

by President Lawrence K. Pettit

Last November, as I was touring the National Palace Museum in Taipei, it occurred to me just how small a village our globe has become. The tour guide who was introducing an international group to the exquisite wonders of ancient Chinese art and culture spoke in English, but with a German accent. Two years earlier, I had had the pleasure of viewing the treasures of Cairo's Museum of Egyptian Antiquities under the expert tutelage of a guide whose native language was not Arabic but French.

This time I was in Taiwan as one of twenty university presidents who had been invited from every continent for a week of ceremonies to help Tamkang University celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. Tamkang used the occasion to sign formal exchange agreements with ten of us, including, in addition to IUP, the universities of Vienna, Vladivostok, and Bonn and Hereford College of Oxford University.

During the week we discussed several issues confronting higher education and society. I was struck by the commonality of our understanding of the issues and of the challenges we face, yet I also realized how much we have to learn from each other because of a variety of perspectives that have been shaped by generations of distinctiveness in language and national habits.

These personal experiences affirm for me IUP's commitment to global literacy and to providing an international experience to as many of our students as possible. In the twenty-first century it will be difficult for any person, or any university or business, to compete without an acquaintance with diverse cultures or without an international perspective. The internationalization of our university is essential not only for the education of our students in the classical sense but also in order to prepare them to be successful in the practical world they will inhabit.

Before leaving for Taiwan I learned that IUP this year has thirty-eight students from that country, along the continuum from undergraduate to doctoral status. All told, we have between five hundred and six hundred international students from seventy-seven countries. As a matter of fact, of all the international students in our fourteen-university State System of Higher Education, just under 35 percent are at IUP.

IUP maintains exchange programs at thirty-three sites around the globe, including the usual England, France, and Germany, but also China, Croatia, Egypt, Japan, Kenya, Poland, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Zimbabwe, and others. We are one of only a few American universities that offer student teaching opportunities abroad. We have such sites in Ireland, England, Denmark, the Netherlands, Poland, France, Jamaica, and Nigeria. In addition, we have five active study abroad programs in Costa Rica, England, France, Mexico, and Spain.

In addition to these special IUP opportunities, our students may participate in the International Student Exchange Program and the National Student Exchange Program. Finally, a student through independent study can arrange an appropriate

STAR TRIBUNE Minneapolis-St. Paul

SOCIETY TO BE IN ST. PAUL: James McCormick '59, the only chancellor Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education has ever had, will leave his post June 30 to become chancellor of the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities system. MnSCU includes thirty-five schools with fifty-three campuses and about 140,000 students. The Pennsylvania system of fourteen state-owned universities has gone from fewer than 82,000 students when it was formed in 1983 to more than 96,000 students under McCormick's leadership. Shown on the day of his selection by the MnSCU board, McCormick is a native of Indiana County and a former president of Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania.

In the past few years, two of our students have won prestigious Fulbright awards to do graduate study abroad, both in Germany. IUP's faculty is far in front of the other State System universities, with fifty of its members having won Fulbright awards to teach and conduct research abroad.

It is hard to imagine a real university these days without this kind of international involvement.

Both IUP and the surrounding community are enriched by the presence of international students and by the experiences of our American faculty and students when they return from study in another culture. In addition, there is a very practical side to this. For example, international students help us to provide translation services for American businesses. (See the story on page 2 in this issue). And, our international alumni are a valuable resource in the recruitment of students and in our efforts to help Pennsylvania businesses and government establish contacts in other countries. Thus, through globalization, the university is better able to pursue both its pedagogical and its public service goals. 🐾

SHE NOT HAD SOME EXTRA ENCOURAGEMENT FROM
IUP'S NEXT STEP PROGRAM.

While in high school, she met the program's income guidelines and fit its profile. She was a student with academic potential but was not excelling in the classroom. Her parents had not attended college.

She feels the Next Step program helped her make a smooth transition to higher education.

"I knew more about the campus," said Smith, a rehabilitation major who is minoring in psychology. "It wasn't so much of a shock for me. I knew where things were and what to expect."

At IUP, Smith is a member of Mortar Board, a prestigious honor society, and has gotten no grade but A since her sophomore year.

Evelyn Landon, former director of IUP's Institute for Research and Community Service, began Next Step with grant funding in 1992 with just over twenty students. She donated her time to directing the program for several years before retiring.

"The Next Step Program was designed to identify kids with potential to succeed in postsecondary education but who probably would not consider postsecondary education," Landon said. "We weren't looking for the straight-A students. We were looking at kids who had the potential, with some encouragement, to succeed.”

Income-eligible students begin the program in eighth or ninth grade and can continue throughout their high school years. Smith, who is from Cookport in rural Indiana County, attended Purchase Line Junior-Senior High School, one of three that have been matched with IUP for the program. Also taking part are schools in the Derry Area School District and the Armstrong School District.

The program’s main activity is a week-long, on-campus, summer day camp, during which students learn about topics such as financial aid, scholarships, grants, career selection, college and vocational school selection, Internet skills, and study skills.

The program gives high school students the chance to sit in on college classes and hear about campus life from the IUP students and faculty members who speak to the group. Next Step also plans information nights for parents and such activities as a group trip to an IUP football game. Current Next Step students are helping to write the program’s web site: www.english.iup.edu/projects/nextstep.

“I think it’s important that the students are treated with respect,” Smith said. “They ask you what you need from the program. They try to tailor it to our needs.”

Gian Pagnucci, IUP English professor and current Next Step director, said about 70 percent of those in the program have gone on to college: about a third of them to IUP and another third to other State System universities. The choices of the other 30 percent include vocational education and military training. He said most of the students from the program who have gone into postsecondary education have maintained at least a B average.

“We do a lot of good things at IUP,” Pagnucci said. “It’s a real nice outreach program that helps the community.”

Smith performs some community outreach of her own. She works about one overnight shift a week as an on-call crisis-intervention worker for the Open Door Drug and Alcohol Treatment Center in Indiana. It started as a volunteer position.

She also works part-time in the acquisitions department of the university’s library.

In addition to working two jobs and maintaining her high academic average, Smith serves as vice president of the IUP chapter of the Pennsylvania Rehabilitation Association. She is also a member of the Council for Exceptional Children, which works with children with disabilities, and of Psi Chi, an honorary psychology association.

“I have a to-do list that’s two pages long,” she said. “I think the more things you’re involved in, the more organized you become. It can be frustrating, but it’s worth it.”

Pagnucci is impressed by her accomplishments. “To have a student come from this sort of program and reach that level is wonderful,” he said.

Smith is spending her last semester of college in an internship in the vocational department of Harmarville Rehabilitation Hospital. She’s applying for graduate school programs that focus on occupational therapy or head trauma.

Landon knows Smith well and enjoyed watching her succeed at IUP. “She’s probably one of those students who is highly motivated,” Landon said. “She has a very quiet way about her, but it’s a quiet confidence.” 🐾

the Books

Here are more "Special People"—short essays about IUP people who have influenced the writers' lives, submitted in honor of the university's 125th anniversary. The deadline for submissions has passed, but the final installment of "Special People" will appear in the Summer, 2001, issue.

Swing-out the Border of Continuing and Nonresident Education

Many people influenced my life while I was at IUP, and one of those was Dr. Roger Axford who was dean of the School of Continuing and Nonresident Education. I first met Dr. Axford when I was one of two student members of the Academic Affairs Committee of the University Senate. The committee was dominated by administrators and faculty, some of whom were quite opposed to student membership. This was during a time when the university was moving from a closed to a more collaborative style of governance.

From the beginning, Dr. Axford welcomed us to the committee and listened eagerly to our comments, encouraging us to contribute to the discussions. I will never forget the time Dr. Axford congratulated me at the end of the meeting and said how wonderful it was to have responsible student input. He turned to another administrator who did not share his enthusiasm and said "and don't you think so, too" only to be met by stony silence. Through all of this, Dr. Axford modeled for me how to stand up for my convictions in the face of opposition.

I later served a semester internship in Dr. Axford's office where he guided me through a study of the adult students enrolled in evening noncredit classes. In the process, he provided critical, but encouraging, help, and the final report turned out to be one of the highest-quality papers I wrote while at IUP.

During the time I worked under his guidance, Dr. Axford remarked several times that I was part of the first generation of students whose education would never end and that we would experience the need for "lifelong education" for the rest of our lives. Every time I take a noncredit seminar or a credit course, I think of Dr. Axford and recall how on the mark he was. At this point in my life, as I begin a new degree program, which will open the door to a new level of work, I again think of Dr. Axford.

About twenty years had lapsed after I graduated from IUP when I contacted Dr. Axford through a professional association. When I got him on the phone, he was as warm and encouraging as he had been years before. We shared about the paths we had taken and reveled in a friendship begun on the IUP campus years before.

Swing-out Day at Normal, Indiana, Pa.

My father, Joseph B. Oliver, who graduated in January, 1956, is truly a person who has influenced my life tremendously. He received a degree in elementary education and taught fifth and sixth grades for over thirty-five years in the Kittanning, Pa., area. During his evenings, he worked full-time as a butcher for various grocery stores. After what must have been an exhausting day, he would cheerfully come home to where his six sons and three daughters were anxiously awaiting his arrival. Now, as a grandfather of twenty-five, he continues to amaze me with his unending energy and zest for life.

My father's unbelievable drive and determination became so instilled in me that I went on to further my education at IUP where in December, 1995, I received my M.A. in criminology. The primary reason I chose IUP was due to my father's intense desire to have one of his children follow in his footsteps. He constantly talks about how he enjoyed IUP and how wonderful a university it is.

I was more than honored to attend IUP for a man that sacrificed so much for me and his family. To this day, my mother frequently remarks of how proud my father is that I graduated from his alma mater. As daddy's little girl, I will always be grateful for IUP because it is one special bond that ties us together forever.

Obituary

I was saddened to learn of Dr. Rawleigh's death in December, 1998. No doubt, the Sociology Department faculty and those students fortunate enough to have had him for class miss him greatly. My sincere sympathies go out to his family, of whom he spoke fondly.

As an undergraduate clinical sociology major, Dr. Rawleigh taught several of my classes. His enthusiasm for education and interest in his students was fantastic. He challenged students to move beyond the basics and engage in critical thinking and self-analysis. He was a strong advocate of putting research and personal beliefs into action to address the various social issues students would soon face in professional practice.

On a personal level, Dr. Rawleigh was a great inspiration as an educator and as a person. He always made time for me to discuss my classwork and professional plans. He continually pointed out my strengths and encouraged me to dream and act big. He would be pleased to learn I finished work on a master's degree in social work in May, 2000. A doctoral degree may not be an unrealistic goal for my future. Dr. Rawleigh was a positive influence in my education, and he will always be remembered.

I have learned much from JoAnne Peterson, who supports her country by encouraging Girl Scouts to be good, caring citizens. She is a council trainer and was a delegate to the National Convention. Being a third vice president for the Talus Rock Girl Scout Council and a member of the board for six years gave her experience in reaching out to others by getting them involved in things happening in their country and by teaching Girl Scouts to take care of the land. As a senior leadership development program leader, she works with Senior Girl Scouts and was a service unit director in Homer City and a delegate to the Talus Rock Annual Meeting. For the last two years she escorted Girl Scouts to Washington to tour the Capitol to earn their Marian Awards, a religious award for the Girl Scouts.

JoAnne's involvement as president of the Altar Rosary Society taught her respect for others' opinions. Very active in her church, she sets a good example in her community by teaching her family to respect others and treat people fairly. Working at the polls, she encourages others to exercise their vote after voting herself. Being a band and cheerleader parent, she helped with special events. Serving as president of the PTA for two years taught her how to work with others. She was a library aide and now participates in the WIN school program. She is on the Catholic Committee on Scouting and also worked with 4H.

In her Homer City ABC Fun Child Care Center, the children recite the "Pledge of Allegiance" every day. Good citizenship is taught. She was one of the people instrumental in starting the Homer City Business Association and was involved with the Women's Club of Homer City. She was the first woman to receive the Homer City "Good Citizenship Award" and was recognized in 2000 with the Athena Award for all of Indiana County.

After the death of her husband, she raised five children while earning her degree in elementary education at IUP. I have learned much from my sister about living and loving life!

Latitudinal Changes

For Harold and Susan Nugent, retiring from teaching at a New Hampshire college meant looking forward to fun in the Florida sun. They didn't realize their destiny would include holding court on the differences between alligator and crocodile skulls.

Since Harold (D'79) and Susan (D'80) moved to the Florida Keys in the early '90s, they have been in the forefront of the environmental and conservation movement. As volunteers for the Florida Keys Wildlife Refuges, they were instrumental in forming the Friends and Volunteers of Refuges (FAVOR). With Harold as chairperson and Susan as secretary, FAVOR has helped increase awareness of the refuges and encouraged the protection of endangered species. Their efforts were rewarded by the National Wildlife Refuge System, which presented Harold and Susan with the 1999 National Volunteer of the Year Award.

The Nugents credit IUP for their commitment and ability to educate others, including their research training under IUP professors Marilyn Sternglass, Joan Yanuzzi, and Ken Wilson. They carried this commitment to New Hampshire, where Harold taught linguistics and Susan was an English professor. It wasn't until Harold retired from teaching that the Nugents' environmental awareness began to flower. They had volunteered for the National Wildlife Refuges on Big Pine Key and were assigned to track a young endangered Key deer that had been released from the Veterinary Hospital in Gainesville, Fla. In the second week of tracking they found the deer dead in a mosquito ditch, hundreds of miles of which had been dug by developers in the '60s to drain the land and cut down on mosquitoes. Their subsequent campaign to fill in the ditches to save Key deer fawns came to a halt when they realized that the ditches had become essential to the survival of the fifty to sixty resident American alligators. This introduction to the interconnectedness of all life in the water, land, and air set the stage for the next ten years of their lives.

"It's a lot easier to be an environmentalist when you're retired," Harold said. "I have a lot of respect for the people that work full-time and still make time to volunteer for the environment." Since moving to Florida, Harold's interests have expanded to include becoming a local expert on the American alligator and crocodile (Florida is the only state that has both). Susan has joined the faculty at Gainesville's Santa Fe Community College, where she continues to teach English. She has also found time to write two books and is working on a third focusing on twelve women in the Florida Keys who have made substantial contributions to preserving the environment. Harold is looking to volunteer for more alligator and crocodile studies in the area. He has also turned back to his linguistic training, researching the Conch dialect of Bahamians who live in Key West. He and Susan hope that their talks on the dialect will help improve tolerance of diversity by increasing historical and cultural communication.

Last spring, the Nugents visited Cuba for two weeks, attending an annual conference for crocodile specialists. They were impressed with the friendliness and openness of the Cuban people and commended their efforts to preserve and conserve their endangered species. Coming from the Nugents, that is high praise indeed.

New Works/

Last fall, IUP hosted the art exhibit New Works/New Europe. The exhibit featured the work of twenty-two faculty members from the Academy of Fine Arts in Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina; the Academy of Fine Arts in Zagreb, Croatia; and the Academy of Fine Arts in Ljubljana, Slovenia.

The exhibit of sculpture, painting, digitized computer graphics, animation, and video art focused on the artist-professor as an important prototype in effecting change and influencing new generations. "This exhibition is a journey through time, language, and place," said curator James Nestor, professor of graduate and advanced sculpture at IUP. "I sought out individuals whose art expressed a special turn of the mind. The great complexity of much of this work comes from the integration of advanced technology, a profound belief in the primacy of art and a probing respect and fear of history." [See also "What They Said" in this issue.]

Oral History Project

Former students and associates of History Department professor Irwin Marcus are invited to participate in an oral history project that will supplement and complement the history of the university as reflected in publications, archival material, and recollections. The project's scope will span more than four decades; the interviews will be a supplement to the Irwin Marcus Collection in the IUP Library and other resources in the library's Special Collections. Individuals willing to share their recollections and perspectives are urged to write to James Dougherty, Ph.D., Department of Sociology, 112F McElhaney Hall, IUP, Indiana, PA 15705 or to e-mail him at jdoc@grove.iup.edu.

Peace in Our Time

For the second time in ten years, IUP Criminology professor Timothy Austin has received a national grant from the U.S. Institute of Peace for research connected with Muslim-Christian conflict in the Philippines. The independent, nonpartisan institute is funded by Congress to promote peaceful resolution of international conflict.

Austin's research will focus mainly on the Autonomous Region of Muslim Mindanao, established a decade ago in the southern Philippines. The conflict there, he says, "is comparable to problems in the Middle East. It goes back hundreds of years and involves a lot of terrorist activity such as hostage taking."

An IUP faculty member since 1984, Austin has an academic background in anthropology, as well as in criminology, and has made a total of five nationally funded visits to the Philippines, including the first one subsidized by the U.S. Institute of Peace in 1993. The current grant for $30,000 represents only a small percentage of the more than $3 million in research proposals submitted from IUP and funded last year, according to Michele Schwietz, interim

Austin's book Banana Justice, subtitled Field Notes on Philippine Crime and Custom, was published by Praeger in 1999; his next book will focus more closely on the Muslim-Christian conflict issue. Austin will travel to the Philippines in late summer or early fall. He acknowledges that, with terrorist activity a possibility, "I will probably have to be a little careful when I am traveling around in some areas."

“The motley crew”

Instant Friends

I read with interest your article on the IUP rugby team in the Fall, 2000, issue of IUP Magazine. Rugby is one of the last great amateur sports in the world, and I am glad to see that the tradition lives on at Indiana. I started playing the game there, and seeing the team doing well brought back some memories.

Rugby at IUP goes back almost thirty years. As a member of the first IUP rugby team in 1971, I thought you would enjoy seeing a photo of the team. The picture on page 198 of the 1972 Oak shows the original team. We were a motley crew to be sure, but we had fun getting the game established on campus. The team had two jerseys: maroon and white for home games and black for the road. Dave Mason, the founder, was a member of the university staff and lived in the apartment in Scranton Hall.

That first season was tough, and the first win did not come until the “B” side game against Kent State on April 8, 1972. By 1973 we were playing much better and wins came more easily.

Playing at IUP set me on the road to a long association with the game. After graduation in 1973 I played throughout my Army days and for several club teams. Playing rugby gives you an instant set of friends wherever you go! My congratulations to Larry Bouma and IUP Rugby. Keep the sport alive and well at IUP!

Spike Lee, one of Hollywood's most influential filmmakers during the past decade, spoke at Fisher Auditorium in November as part of IUP's “Issues and Ideas” lecture series. Lee's films include Malcolm X, Clockers, Do the Right Thing, Summer of Sam, and Bamboozled.

Mentors

Mentors is a feature that highlights and reports on IUP faculty members, past and present. News of alumni who are also faculty members will continue to appear in Class Notes.

Diane Klein of the Department of Special Education and Clinical Services was selected to serve as one of five national regional coordinators for a $2.1 million federal grant awarded to the Association of College Educators of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing. The grant will focus on infusing technology into curriculum, creating technologically enhanced products, and giving future teachers of the deaf and hard of hearing hands-on experience in the implementation of software and multimedia tools.

Added Accolades

Not only was IUP selected for inclusion in Kiplinger's Personal Finance as one of the 100 best buys in public colleges and universities, but it also is the only public university in Pennsylvania chosen as one of the best 331 colleges in The Princeton Review. The publication used results from anonymous student surveys, statistical data provided by colleges and universities, and feedback from alumni, counselors, and prospective students who visited the campus.

"To be selected for this guidebook, to be in the company of institutions like California Institute of Technology, Yale, the University of Chicago, and Dartmouth College, reflects a much more accurate picture of our university as a mature doctoral institution focused on educating tomorrow's leaders," said President Lawrence K. Pettit. "It is gratifying to see students in this survey group also recognize our commitment to campus safety and technology."

▲ Clark McKowen

Ligonier Sightings

Inspired by the region around the Ligonier Valley in southwestern Pennsylvania, Clark McKowen '81 wrote this collection of haiku and free-form poems. Recently published by Laurel Mountain Press, the "verbal snapshots" in Ligonier Sightings offer glimpses of nature in all its seasons, each containing a hint of the writer's involvement in the image. McKowen says the poems help him recapture the places he's been and the feelings from his childhood, when walking through the woods was a new experience. The pen-and-ink drawings that accompany the poems are by Joy Biesinger Fairbanks '72. McKowen has written other books and articles and given seminars about communication, critical and creative thinking, film appreciation, and academic skills.

Meaning First

Meaning First is a concise rhetoric and handbook that takes students step-by-step from generating and developing an idea to final editing. Written by Carolyn Green Hartnett D'80, the book is designed to meet the needs of first-year college composition students, basic writers, and speakers of languages other than English. Released through Parlay Enterprises, the book applies the Hallidayan Systemic Functional Linguistic approach that she worked on for her dissertation. A professor emeritus at College of the Mainland in Texas, Hartnett is now an independent linguistics researcher.

Hassle-Free Holidays

Hassle-Free Holidays From the Castle of the Cookie Queen is the latest cookbook by Pat Condell '83. Eighty-seven quick and delicious recipes are combined with cleaning, decorating, gardening, and time-saving tips to help make holiday festivities easy and fun. More information is at <http://onward.to/cookiequeen/>.

Return to Masada

The epic tale of the battle of Masada is given new life by Robert Makin '89 in the novel Return to Masada, published by Dandelion Books. Makin, a former seminary student, offers a fresh look at Masada through the eyes of a Christian scholar. The question he asks is as current today as in the times of Roman conquest: Can the power of an idea change the course of history?

Original and Fine Art by Robert Olszewski Greatest Stories and Characters from Alumnus Robert Olszewski

Internationally acclaimed painter and sculptor Robert Olszewski '68 has specialized in the fine art of micro-sculpture for nearly a quarter-century. Sophisticated collectors around the world prize his work.

Inspired by classical themes and moving personal experiences, each Olszewski micro-sculpture is a study in anecdotal detail and graceful animation. Each piece is the defining moment of a story that unfolds before our eyes.

Hand painted and crafted from a combination of cast pewter, bronze, and resin, Storytime miniatures are newly available at the Co-op Store. For more information on those shown here—or for a brochure that depicts items in their actual size and also features additional items—call or write the Co-op Store or access the store's website at www.iupstore.com.

A Place among the Nation's Elite

Odds are the IUP field hockey team would've been satisfied merely with a winning record.

But the Indians beat the odds—and most of their opponents—last fall on a giddy joyride to the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference championship game and the NCAA Division II semifinals, unfamiliar destinations to a program that long languished in obscurity.

"I think the referee at the PSAC final said it best. She said, 'I didn't even know IUP had a field hockey program until this year,'" junior goalkeeper Jen Lawler recalled. "So I think we pretty much made our mark."

The Indians' dizzying ascent to the upper echelon of Division II field hockey surprised not only a certain referee, but first-year head coach Noelle Bowman and her players as well. Who could have expected two victories over the sport's Goliath, nine-time national champion Bloomsburg? A 9-0 start that catapulted the Indians atop the STX/National Field Hockey Coaches Association poll? The best record (14-6) in school history? A berth in the PSAC championship game? An invitation to the NCAA tournament for the first time ever?

"I never thought this would happen. I never thought we would reach the level of play that we did," said Bowman, who earned PSAC Coach of the Year honors only two years after wrapping up her playing career at IUP. "Just making the NCAA tournament was kind of a dream come true."

When the season began, the Indians didn't dare ponder the possibility of an NCAA berth, so far-fetched was the prospect of qualifying. This was a program, after all, that hadn't reached the conference tournament in fourteen years.

"Our realistic goal? I think it was to make the PSAC playoffs," said sophomore forward Julie Hess, who joined Lawler as an NFHCA All-America selection. "I don't know if we even talked about nationals."

That changed two weeks into the season when Lawler's spectacular work in goal and an overtime score by Hess lifted the Indians to a stunning 1-0 victory over top-ranked Bloomsburg. IUP dealt the seemingly invincible Huskies—national champs four years running—only their second loss in a span of sixty matches.

"I was real excited we won, but I wasn't very pleased with the way we had played, because they outshot us and pretty much dominated the game," Bowman said. "And then it kind of hit me: Hey, we beat Bloomsburg even though we didn't play our best hockey. I knew right then and there that we had a pretty good shot at making the national tournament."

Funny how a single victory can so radically alter perspective. There was a time when

"I just didn't know how the girls would react to my being the coach or if they had the confidence in me to do the job," Bowman said. "I even had doubts in myself, whether I could come in here and do as good a job as Missy."

Bowman figured her team would require tickets to attend the NCAAs. Former coach Missy Moran had left behind a roster stocked with accomplished players, but Bowman wasn't convinced the Indians could improve on their 10-8 record of the year before.

"I just didn't know how the girls would react to my being the coach or if they had the confidence in me to do the job," she said. "I even had doubts in myself, whether I could come in here and do as good a job as Missy."

Those doubts soon vanished like wallets at a pickpockets' convention. Many of the Indians responded to their new coach with career years. Hess finished third in the PSAC scoring race (1.85 points per game) and tied senior forward Michelle Benko for the team lead in goals (14). Lawler ranked third in the conference with a sparkling 1.01 goals-against average. Hess and junior midfielder Bethany Caputa earned PSAC first-team honors and Lawler, Benko, and freshman back Chrissy Hill were second-team picks. Caputa and Lawler were later selected to the NCAA all-tournament team.

"We came a long way this season," Bowman said. "These girls jelled on the field, they all got along, and they supported one another. I think that's why we had so much success."

The Indians' dream season ended with a 2-1 NCAA semi-final loss to host and eventual champion Lock Haven, but their appearance in a national tournament was in itself a victory of sorts. No one expected IUP to join the sport's elite, the aforementioned referee included.

The challenge Bowman now faces is to make the NCAAs a yearly destination. Prospects for a return trip this fall are favorable, given that the Indians lose only Benko and forward Krista Herman to graduation.

"I think we should be pretty solid next season, especially with the experience we gained from being in the national tournament and getting as far as we did," Bowman said. "One of the girls put it best after we lost to Lock Haven at nationals. She said, 'Hey, Coach, we've had so much fun here. I think we want to come back next year.'"

Odds are the IUP field hockey team won't be satisfied with anything less. 🍌

Dropouts

Frank Cignetti '60, M'65 has worked plenty of magic in his fifteen seasons as IUP's football coach, but his latest trick would've astonished even Merlin: He guided a team without a quarterback into the national playoffs. When injuries exhausted the Indians' supply of experienced signal callers last fall, Cignetti handed the reins to senior tailback Tink Stennett for the final two games. Stennett responded by directing the Indians to wins over California and Millersville that secured an NCAA Division II playoff berth. "I could not be prouder of our football team," said Cignetti. "We had a lot of adversity with injuries, but they rallied and fought back." While IUP lost its first-round match-up at Northwood Institute (Mich.) to finish 8-3, just reaching the postseason was cause for celebration, given that fully half of the starters were sidelined at various times. Junior linebacker Mike Borisenko repeated as the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference Western Division Defensive Player of the Year, earned Daktronics Northeast Region first-team all-star honors, and was a first-team selection on the American Football Coaches Association, d2football.com, and usafootball.com All-America squads. Senior defensive end Roger Wilson, junior nose tackle Tim Buffone, sophomore tailback Aamir Dew, and sophomore wide receiver Carmelo Ocasio joined Borisenko as first-team all-conference picks. Wilson tied the school record for career sacks (36) set in 1987 by Troy Jackson, while Dew rushed for 1,191 yards to join Michael Mann '94 and Dennis Robinson '97 as the only backs in IUP history to twice top 1,000 yards in a season. Expect more magic this fall, when seventeen starters return. "There's an excellent nucleus," Cignetti said. "This is probably as good a group that we've had coming back as far as playing experience and maturity."

Under coach Carmine Cortazzo '70, who took over a foundering program three seasons ago, the women's volleyball team (25-11) won more matches last fall than any IUP squad since 1982 and advanced to the NCAA Division II tournament for the first time ever. The Indians defeated Slippery Rock in the opening round before falling to host Lock Haven in the regional semifinals. "Going 25-11 against the quality of competition we played is really a credit to our young ladies," said Cortazzo. "I couldn't have asked for more as far as work ethic and the effort they put forth." Sophomore outside hitter Laura Hall, who led the conference in kills (4.97 per game) and ranked second in hitting percentage (.398), was named the PSAC West Player of the Year and accorded a berth on the Division II Atlantic Region all-star team.

Senior forward Jodi Frederick, who sat out most of last season after tearing her anterior cruciate ligament, made a spectacular return to the basketball floor by scoring a career-high thirty-one points in IUP's opener, an 84-56 rout of Tiffin (Ohio). That's the eighth-best single-game total in school history.

Frederick also puts up big numbers in the classroom. She and seven teammates—Megan Smith '00, Melanie Karas, Carrie Maitland, Beth McDonald, Carey Snyder, Grace-Anne Wood, and Megan Woodall—earned PSAC Scholar-Athlete honors for the 1999-2000 season as IUP ranked ninth among NCAA Division II women's basketball programs with a collective grade-point average of 3.442. The Indians finished in the top ten for the third time in four seasons under coach Sandy Thomas.

The sixth-ranked IUP rugby team (7-2) gained a berth in this spring's Division I national tournament after closing the fall segment of its schedule with a 28-20 loss to Ohio State in the Midwest Region championship game. The Indians of coach Larry Bouma finished fourth nationally a year ago.

John Ballein '83 was promoted to director of athletics for football operations at Virginia Tech, where he's been employed in various capacities since 1989. The Hokies were 10-1, ranked sixth nationally, and bound for the Gator Bowl as IUP Magazine went to press.

Ruth Martin Haude '58, who earned four letters while playing for the IUP men's tennis team—a women's varsity program didn't yet exist—was presented the 2000 Rolex/International Tennis Association Achievement Award at the U.S. Open. Haude was cited for her role as a "trailblazer."

Dave Dougherty '95 and Bob Dougherty '85, sons of former IUP football and baseball coach Owen Dougherty, follow the NFL with more than passing interest these days.

Dave, who played soccer for the Indians, works as a scout and administrative assistant for the Philadelphia Eagles. Bob, an Indiana attorney, serves as the agent for former IUP All-American Leander Jordan, a guard with the Carolina Panthers.

IUP retired the number of Chris Villarrial '95, who preceded Jordan into the NFL, during ceremonies prior to an October game against Clarion at Miller Stadium. "It's such an honor, and it's something I never expected to happen," said Villarrial, a two-time All-American who starts at guard for the Chicago Bears. "I'm at a loss for words."

Head coach and IUP alumnus Jim Haslett had guided the New Orleans Saints, 3-13 cellar dwellers a year ago, to a 9-5 record at press time. Despite losing eight starters to season-ending injuries since training camp opened, the Saints reeled off a six-game winning streak—the second-longest in franchise history—and climbed into first place in the NFC West.

"It just amazes me that he still has those records," says Don ("Bones") Cavalero, Crossan's teammate throughout his career (1952-56) at what was then Indiana State Teachers College. "Especially the way scoring has been lately. And with the advent of the three-point rule, you'd think those records would've been gone long ago."

Crossan's standard for career points (1,564) withstood all challenges for forty years, until Robert Misenko came along. Of course, while Crossan needed only sixty-four games to reach that total, Misenko required 110. The two leading scorers in IUP history couldn't have been more dissimilar: Misenko, a six-foot-seven center, scored most of his 1,715 points in the paint; Crossan, a six-foot sharpshooter, preferred a perimeter attack. His range seemingly extended to midcourt.

"He could shoot from anywhere," recalls George Wise, an ISTC standout in his own right (1958-61) and later a teammate of Crossan's with the Indiana ACs, a top-flight independent squad. "There were games when he'd make six or seven in a row, miss one, then make another six or seven in a row. He'd shoot off the wrong foot, he'd bank in shots from the corner. He was impossible to stop."

As Crossan's shots fell, so did school records. He poured in thirty-four points against Geneva early in his junior season to eclipse the ISTC career scoring record of 667, set by Joe Sutula in 1939. Incredibly, Crossan needed only twenty-eight games to unseat Sutula as the all-time leader. He would more than double the record before graduating.

Crossan's marksmanship was such that McKnight gave him a green light to shoot from anywhere on the floor. He'd regularly launch long-range assaults in which basketballs rained from the rafters and found the hoop with uncanny precision, as if guided by some mysterious force. When Crossan caught fire, he could bring opposing players to their knees and opposing coaches to their feet.

"I remember distinctly a game down at Geneva, which in those days was our big rival," recalls former IUP English professor and assistant basketball coach Bill Betts. "In the second half he just buried one shot after another. Geneva's coach, Cliff Aultman, got up off the bench and said, 'Does this guy never miss?' He thought Jack was unbelievable, as we all did."

Crossan burnished his legend at Waller Gym the night of February 17, 1956, by erasing his own single-game scoring standard with forty-two points in a 131-72 rout of Edinboro. The irony is that teammate Joe DeLise could have beaten him to the record had McKnight not pulled the sophomore with four minutes remaining. DeLise exited with thirty-seven points; Crossan then had thirty-five.

"Jack's been a great player for us for four years," McKnight explained afterwards. "He deserved the chance to set a new record."

McKnight's decision delighted Crossan, but a group of fans took issue with the coach and jeered him until his face bore the same coloring as the bricks outside.

"There were people in the stands heckling Coach McKnight," recalls DeLise, who joined Crossan in the IUP Athletic Hall of Fame in 1998. "He turned to me and said, 'Who are those guys? Are they friends of yours?' I told him, 'I don't know them, I swear.' As I look back on it, I understand why he took me out. Jack was a senior and I was only a sophomore. I'd have time to break the record."

Which he did, two years later, with a fifty-two-point performance at Alliance. Most of Crossan's other scoring standards lasted much longer. In fact, no one has even threatened his records for single-season and career scoring averages. They've survived forty-five years and could well survive another forty-five.

Say this: Anyone bent on bettering those numbers will require a supreme effort to remove Jack Crossan's name from the record book—the kind of effort required by his teammates the night they forcibly removed him from the Waller Gym floor. 🐾

Jack Henry '69 and Frank Cignetti, Jr. '89 are members of Haslett's coaching staff.

Paul Failla '99, who quarterbacked IUP to a 10-2 record in 1998, was the ninth player selected in the inaugural XFL draft, by the Chicago Enforcers. The eight-team XFL, which will operate as a spring league, is co-owned by the World Wrestling Federation and NBC.

Freshman Jessica Steck concluded her rookie season of cross country by finishing fifty-first at the NCAA Division II national meet in Pomona, Calif. Steck and sophomore Sara Raschiatore earned all-region honors two weeks before by placing fourth and sixth, respectively, at the East Region meet.

Sophomore midfielder Tia Kipp, who led the Indians in points (16) and assists (6) and tied for the team lead with five goals, was named to the National Soccer Coaches Association of America Division II Northeast Region second team. Kipp also earned All-PSAC first-team honors.

National championships won by Tammy Donnelly Slusser '87, Rick

Hrip '68, and the IUP golf team were included among the fifty "greatest moments" in the fifty-year history of the PSAC, as selected by the conference sports information directors. Donnelly won the 10,000-meter run at the NCAA Division II track and field meet in 1986, while Hrip captured individual honors and led IUP to the team title at the 1968 NAIA golf tournament.

Elizabeth ("Bea") Zicha '78 has stepped down after sixteen seasons as the women's volleyball coach at Muskingum College, where she posted a 444-167 record, led the Lady Muskies to six NCAA Division III tournament appearances, and won four Ohio Athletic Conference Coach of the Year awards. Her 1999 team finished third in the nation. "I was surrounded by good people and was real fortunate to recruit high-quality athletes," Zicha said. "When you have a situation like that, you can be pretty successful." Zicha will assume full-time teaching responsibilities in the department of physical and health education, where she will continue as an assistant professor. 🐾

PARK HERE: The university's new 427-space parking garage opened in November. Located behind Sprowls (left) and Cogswell halls, the garage admits cars from Grant Street at present and eventually from what will be a three-lane Oakland Avenue as well. Parkers use any available space, except those designated for handicapped access, and pay by the space. All areas of the garage are served by an elevator; the third floor connects to a walkway bridge and the plaza shown.
